Candidate KAIYANG HU

Subject PIANO

Pieces or Songs An atmospheric opening with the first Scarlatti Sonata - it was stylishly shaped, voiced and ornamented and had a gently persistent pulse without ever becoming rigid. The second sonata had plenty of rhythmic buoyancy, without the sound ever stepping beyond the bounds of the decorum. A sparkling, technically assured account.

The first movement of the Mozart was technically assured, with some really sparkling fingerwork and very stylish control of textures and tone. There was a tendency to hurry a little at times, but you found all the colour and shape the music has to offer, whilst staying within the bounds of Classical elegance and style. The second movement was meticulously detailed, with well disciplined fingerwork and tidily arranged trills. Phrasing, balance and tone were all conveyed musically within the style - a thoughtful and sophisticated performance. The final movement was played at a well chosen tempo, allowing a clear description of all the necessary musical, technical and stylistic elements, although passagework was sometimes a little hurried - this did not detract from a performance of artistry and musical insight, and of absolute technical assurance. The slower variation was particularly insightful and beautifully presented.

A masterful performance of the Chopin Valse with a vividly painted musical canvas, and idiomatic flexibility in rhythm and tempo. There was a clear understanding of the musical architecture here, with a convincing balance between muscular power and poetic eloquence. The occasional small technical blemish did not mar an exceptional performance.

A truly outstanding performance today in all ways - musically, technically and with a very fine sens of style. Congratulations. 29

Performance as a whole

The programme today was consistently musically engaged and engaging and always well projected, with clear awareness of audience and the performance situation. Stylistic characterisation was exceptional in all the works performed, with instinctive control of textures, tone and balance. Your technique is absolutely assured and you found all the colour the instrument has to offer, always controlled within style and character. 20
